

David R. Brewer

Attorney At Law

David Brewer moved to Kingwood with his family in July of 1993 to serve the First Presbyterian Church of Kingwood as associate pastor, and still lives in Kingwood today. David managed Kingwood's state representative Joe Crabb's district office while in law school; indeed, it was Joe Crabb's encouragement that convinced David to pursue law school in the first place. David had performed the wedding ceremony for Joe Crabb's son and the daughter of a couple from FPCK, gotten to know Joe, and was intrigued by the of Houston while continuing to pastor churches in the area. David is now an elder at Kingwood Christian Church, where his children are involved in youth and children's activities.

David worked for Fulbright & Jaworski and Porter & Hedges before launching his own law practice in the Galleria in March of this year. While many of David's client's are in the downtown and Galleria areas, David is attempting to shift the center of gravity of his practice to Kingwood so that While with the big firms David's practice emphasized commercial and high-end residential real estate law. While this still comprises the bulk of his practice, David has expanded the range of services he provides to include probate, trusts and wills, and, in response to inquiries from friends and church members, general business law. He has helped clients collect on past due accounts, obtain financing for their business ventures, and has drafted and reviewed employment agreements, covenants not to compete, confidentiality agreements, and documents related to forming and acquiring business entities. While transactional law is David's primary emphasis, he has occasionally taken on litigated matters as well.

According to David, "The real strength of my practice is the personal service that I offer my clients. I believe in forming very strong client relationships because, above all, a client must trust in the integrity and professional competency of his or her attorney."

way he was able to balance his career as a Methodist minister with his career as a lawyer and state representative. Convinced he could maintain his involvement in the church while pursuing a career in law, David chose to attend law school at the University he can spend even more time with his children (not having to fight rush hour traffic would be an added plus). Indeed, David already spends one to two days out of every week in the Kingwood area meeting with clients.
